A NIGHT WATCH IN ALGERIA. Terrible Conflict Between Jealous Lion -A Lioness' Fight for Life,

BY BOBERT DANE. [Copyright 1886.] Only those who have experienced it can realize the excitement caused by witnessing a hand-to-hand conflict between two savage untamed besats. I have witnessed bull fights in Mexico, and seen a python crush the life out of a calf in South America, but never gazed on a more thrilling episode than on one hot Algerian night at a water pool about 200 miles in the interior. Beside the pool were several trees of fair size, in the branches of one of which had been placed a small platform hidden among the clus-tered leaves, from which hiding place it was convenient to shoot any animals that to devote a little attention to the decapitation of District Attorney Stone, of Ponnsylvania, and the appointment of a henchman of Wm. L. Scott, of Erio, as the exponnt of a pure article of Civil Service reform.

Mr. Edmunds riddled the Administration's reform pretensions when he took up the case of District Attorney Dustin. But that case was inaccuous, if one may say so, in comparison with the case of Stone. The is nothing which nore delights the soul of Mr. Edmunds then this kind of thing, and when he begins to probe the President with the cold steel of his remorseless logic, we shall be at liberty to imagine the President semaking the sir tropical in the White House.

There will be the displacement of two D. strict Attorneys for making public speeches; the restoration of the Democrat, who made just the kind of vituperative speeches which the President said that not even a Democratic could make and live; the appointment of a Democrat to take the place of the Republican District Attorney who did not abuse the President at all in his specches; and there will be all the fine things the President has said to be contrasted with his rather shatby performances in behalf of reform.

darkness toward where the mains and sharer should take place with open doors the performance will not need to be widely advertised to draw a packed house. Nobody can conduct an affaired this kind quite so well as Mr. Edmunds.

Don't abuse a Good Thing.

The householder who has natural gas in his house pays a lump sum and affer that his fuel is as free as the air he breathes. There is no metre to tell takes.

The natural gas company puts no limit on the use, only stipulating that the gas shall not be wasted. Every burner may be running under all the pressure that the cost.

erations which suggest themselves and it may serve a good purpose to advance them.

Nobody knows that the supply of natural gas is going to lest forever. The probability is that in the territory accessible to Wheeling there is a practically inexhaustible supply, but it does follow that the field now being drawn upon cannot be exhausted. If the company finds its supply running down, or if for any reason the gas shall become more precious than new, it is altogether probable that a metre will be placed in every house. Nothing is so likely as waste to bring the unwelcome runnitor which watches the consumption of every foot and makes a record of it.

Still another thought is, that though the gas comes to us through the company's pipes, it is a gift of Providence, for the reasonable use of which we are responsible. It is a good gift, not it to be abused because it is given in abundance. There are those who use the natural gas as though they fear they never shall be able to get their money's worth out of it.

They turn it on full blast, never considering whether it can be consumed, content to know that it is rushing through the ing whether it can be consumed, content to know that it is rushing through the pipe and up the chimney.

The unconsumed gas adds nothing to the heat. It is as though an equivalent in collect the heat. It is as though an equivalent in fully satisfied with our day's sport.
